The chart displays the percentage of respondents who believe the U.S. should take action to reduce global warming, categorized by the perceived risk of global warming. The chart is divided into two sections: 'U.S. should take action' (top) and 'U.S. should not take action' (bottom). The top section shows a clear trend where more respondents believe the U.S. should take action as the perceived risk of global warming increases. The bottom section shows a much smaller percentage of respondents who believe the U.S. should not take action, with a slight increase in this percentage as the risk increases.
